Beowulf: The Loyalty of Good vs. Evil

5 pages / 1058 words

Beowulf is known to be regarded as the best preserved piece of early medieval literature. Known as the most epic poem that has inspired the works of J.R.R. Tolkien, Beowulf has shown throughout time that this tale of good versus evil is a story that relates to every Holy warrior. Derived from Biblical stories, it is the story of one man's noble mission to defeat the evil that is inflicting a clan in despair and suffering. It is also the story of greed, and of an evil creature that continues to use evil to destroy other's livelihood. The primary theme of Beowulf is the good defeating the evil. Beowulf is our hero throughout the tale, and is known to be a good person who has learned from great kings of the past. Beowulf comes into play when King Hrothgar is plagued with the evil creature known to everyone as Grendel. Grendel, a greedy and ruthless monster, has invaded and pillaged over King Hrothgar's land and people for the past 12 years. Hrothgar feeling defeated has come to ask Beowulf for his help in killing Grendel. Moments like this throughout all of literature resembles the demons we may have throughout our lives. How can a person become so cruel to others, and how we get a hero to volunteer and help save the day? Beowulf is that hero and has come forth to volunteer and save King Hrothgar's kingdom as debt paid for Hrothgar having Beowulf's father in the east. In the poem he reads, "He bore a seaworthy wave-cutler be fitted on, or hrothgar the warrior sing he would sing, and, overwarrior's riding, that lord of great name, heeded not. The whale sought to dislodge them from voyaging hardly or not at all, though they held their own, they weathered his surge, they watched Grendel. The prince had already picked for each from the folk's finest, the fiercest and most than his might be found. With fourteen men he set on a land-wood, to-morrow Beowulf led them right down to the land's edge" (10; Line 197). Beowulf is shown as the beacon of hope for Hrothgar then approaches the mission of defeating Grendel. The plan is simple as most warriors seek justice. As the darkness reaches, Grendel comes to wait and kill one of the men. Beowulf stands ready to fight the monster that has tormented the people for far too long. With strength of thirty men in one hand-grip, Beowulf grabs onto Grendel's claw and detaches his shoulder from his socket and sends him mortally wounded. This is the quintessential conclusion of good guy versus bad guy. What I admire the most of this story is the determination of one person and his values of doing the right thing, and killing what is bad with the intention of saving others. Grendel on the other hand is seen as his most villainous, and when he loses his battle Beowulf is seen as a "Miracle from God". Another thing to remember about this poem is that it is indeed a poem, and it is a poem written in old Anglo-Saxon English that...
