In Harvest, a young Mormon missionary shares his experiences serving in the Philippines. The book follows the missionary as he learns about the culture, the people, and the challenges of sharing his faith. Along the way, he discovers a new understanding of himself and his beliefs.

The missionary, Elder Smith, arrives in the Philippines full of idealism and zeal. He is eager to share his faith with the people he meets and to help them find happiness and salvation. However, he soon discovers that the Philippines is a complex and challenging country. The people are poor, the culture is different, and the challenges of daily life are immense.

Elder Smith struggles to adjust to his new surroundings. He is homesick, he is lonely, and he is frustrated by the lack of progress he is making. However, he gradually begins to learn about the Filipino people and their culture. He learns about their resilience, their faith, and their love of family.

He also learns about the challenges they face, such as poverty, crime, and corruption.

As Elder Smith learns more about the Philippines, he begins to change. He becomes more humble, more compassionate, and more understanding. He also begins to develop a new understanding of his faith. He realizes that faith is not about rules and regulations, but about love and service. He also learns that faith is not something that is static, but something that is always growing and changing.

By the end of his mission, Elder Smith is a changed man. He has a new understanding of the world, of himself, and of his faith. He has also gained a deep love for the Filipino people. Harvest is a moving and inspiring story of a young man's journey of faith and self-discovery. It is a story that will resonate with anyone who has ever struggled with their faith or who has ever wondered about the meaning of life.
