As the sun began to set, casting long shadows across the battlefield, Captain Armstrong gathered his men.

"We have fought bravely, but we are outnumbered and surrounded," he said, his voice steady but tinged with weariness. "Our only hope is to fight our way through to our lines."

The soldiers nodded grimly. They knew the odds were stacked against them, but they were determined to follow their captain to the end.

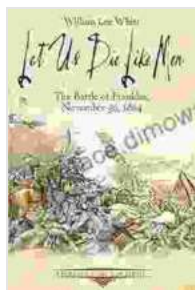

With a deafening roar, the Germans launched their final assault. The soldiers fought back fiercely, but the enemy's numbers were overwhelming.

One by one, the soldiers fell, until only Captain Armstrong remained. He stood alone, his body battered and his heart heavy with grief.

"Let us die like men," he whispered, and charged into the fray.
