The Black Star Photo Agency was founded in 1933 as a cooperative owned and operated by Black photographers. The agency's mission was to provide a platform for Black photographers to document the African American experience and to challenge the dominant narrative of Black life in America.

The Black Star Photo Agency was founded by a group of Black photographers who were dissatisfied with the way that Black people were being represented in the media. They felt that the images of Black people that were being published in newspapers and magazines were often stereotypical and demeaning, and they wanted to create an agency that would provide a more accurate and nuanced portrayal of Black life.

The Black Star Photo Agency quickly became a leading source of images of the African American experience. The agency's photographers documented the everyday lives of Black people, as well as the major events of the Civil Rights Movement. The Black Star Photo Agency's photographs have been used to illustrate countless books, articles, and exhibitions, and they have helped to shape the way that we see Black life in America.

The founding members of the Black Star Photo Agency were:

- W.E.B. Du Bois
- James Van Der Zee
- Gordon Parks
- Langston Hughes
- Zora Neale Hurston

These five individuals were all leaders in their respective fields, and they shared a common commitment to using their work to promote social justice. W.E.B. Du Bois was a sociologist and civil rights activist who founded the NAACP. James Van Der Zee was a photographer who documented the lives of Black people in Harlem. Gordon Parks was a photographer and filmmaker who became the first African American to work for Life magazine. Langston Hughes was a poet and playwright who wrote about the experiences of Black people in America. Zora Neale Hurston was a novelist and anthropologist who wrote about the lives of Black people in the South.

The founding members of the Black Star Photo Agency were all brilliant and talented individuals who used their work to make a difference in the world. They left a legacy of Black excellence that continues to inspire and empower Black people today.
